

The Opioid Public Health Crisis

Course Overview

The Opioid Public Health Crisis began in 1999 and continues more than two decades later. The American toll from the health crisis is large. Between 1999 and 2023, drug overdoses have killed more than 1.2 million Americans. That number exceeds the number of U.S. service members who have died in battle in all wars fought by the United States.

The Opioid Public Health Crisis (OPHC) course will provide you with foundational knowledge on this nationwide health crisis, the historical trends and current conditions and the solutions and actions to take to mitigate and reduce the health crisis effects.

What People Are Saying

"As a public health educator, this course gave me a fantastic overall view of addiction, the opioid crisis (both historically and currently), and how to help."

Discuss the opioid public health crisis - historical, current conditions and trends.

Explain how the health crisis developed, the contributors and risk factors.

Identify the multi-faceted solutions model that states, and communities are applying to reduce the effects of the health crisis and the actions an individual / professional can take to improve the outcomes.

"This helped me understand what I can personally do to help my family and others and that the solutions work when all are used, and everyone works together."
